

Your Brain

(To the melody of Divertimento no. 17 in D, K. 334, Menuet by W. A. Mozart)

You were born with one, essential, fundamental thing that no one ever will explain

And if you use it with a bit of common sense, you will avoid unnecessary pain

It really pays to use / Yes, you were made to use / Don't be afraid to use your brain

You can have the world and all its wonder as your plunder, but before you make your bed

Be sure to broaden your horizons just in case you want to take the universe instead

Don't ever choose without / Never refuse without / You're sure to lose without your head

Now it may seem kind of contradictory to you

From time to time when you are forced to listen to

Some old pedantic fool with nothing else to do

But rattle on and on and on

Then your challenge is to keep your balance

While you find the needle somewhere in the hay

Even though you lead and others follow, you will often feel alone because you'll find

The very fact that you can keep your head in tact, means others are, in fact, the other kind

Don't disapprove without / Never behave without / Don't make a move without your mind

Every now and then you're bound to run into a few

Fanatics who will try to razzle-dazzle you

With happy hocus pocus hype and very

Unsophisticated points of view

You know better than to let them fetter

You with any rules that tell you not to use

The most precious and essential, fundamental thing that no one ever will explain

Be sure to use it with a bit of common sense. You will avoid unnecessary pain

It really pays to use / Yes, you were made to use / Don't be afraid to use your brain
